The Spring Election.

While the Spring election is yet three nonths in the future, it will be found that the expectants for office have already begun to lay their ropes, and string their wires. For each office which is to be vacated, there will be found from two to ten candidates, each with the idea uppermost in his brain that he in particular should like all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They have the covered place. And the majority are persistent in forcing their claims. The positive and sure cure for Rheum tism are persistent in forcing their claims. The average voter who wants nothing excepting to be let atone in the matter of exercising his right of suffrage, and who is liable to be button-holed during the coming three months, will be glad when it is over.

Judge Brewer, of Kansas, has given lecision that if probabilition in that State destroys the value of breweries already extablished the State is liable and must remunerate the losses that accrue to the pro-prictors. This decision is bailed with delight by all the rum champions not only in Kansas, but everywhere else, It is claimed by the advocates of the rum power that Prohibition would work great injustice to those who have invested all their capital in the liquor traffic, having been protected by the law.

Some persons consider this a most form idable orgument sgainst Prohibition. Of the contrary nothing is more fallacious, A close parallel exists between the evilthat resulted from slavery in the South, and the slavery of those who are the victime of 200,000 dram shops. The only difference between the two is that the evils arising from the liquor traffic is a housand told greater. Statistics prove this beyond contradiction.

Slave holders had large fortunes inves ed in negroes and that too "under the laws and protected by the laws," both State and National. They had been purghased in great numbers from the very states which afterward made war for their liberation and freedom. When the proper time came and a single stroke of a pen set them all at liberty, there were no tears shed for those who had invested every dollar of their means in that kind of property and were left as poor and penniless as widows and orphans now are on account of the iquor traffic.

There need be no more misgivings about crippling and wiping out the liquor traffic han the nation had in crippling and wiping out the traffic in negroes. It was the slave holders' misfortune to have invested in negroes, and it is the misfortune of so many to have invested in liqterests of an assassin whose object is murder. His arms are taken from him and onfiscated, as they rightfully should be, So, with all who are 'concerned in this nfamous liquor traffic. Let them stand
